

Patent medicine bottles found among Matilda Hales's possessions.

In addition to patent medicines, Matilda also had access to such commonly used remedies of the day as black salve, a concoction of beeswax, turpentine, rosin, and olive oil into which one slowly added powdered red lead, stirring the mixture over a slow fire. It was used extensively for cold sores, ingrown toenails, mashed fingers and toes, or about any other ailment known to man. Between the pages of an old medical book that belonged to Matilda was a handwritten slip of paper

Ut. Hist. Quart

Summer 1987 Vol 52 #3

Patent medicine bottles found among Matilda Hales's possessions.

In addition to patent medicines, Matilda also had access to such commonly used remedies of the day as black salve, a concoction of beeswax, turpentine, rosin, and olive oil into which one slowly added powdered red lead, stirring the mixture over a slow fire. It was used extensively for cold sores, ingrown toenails, mashed fingers and toes, or about any other ailment known to man. Between the pages of an old medical book that belonged to Matilda was a handwritten slip of paper